
APPORTIONMENTS.

APPORTIONMENTS.

As the primary object of the census is to secure an accurate count of the people for the purpose of fixing the membership of the House of Representatives of Congress and apportioning the same among the several states, a limited space in this report is devoted to a brief statement of all acts relating to the various apportionments, together with tables showing in a concise form the total membership of the House and the number of representatives assigned to each of the states under each act from the formation of the government to the present time.

The following table shows what may be termed the constitutional population of the United States in 1890, the number of representatives prior to apportionment, and the number of representatives provided for by the act which passed the House of Representatives December 17, 1890, and the Senate January 29, 1891, and which was signed by the President February 7, 1891:

The apportionment of representatives in Congress, according to the enumeration of the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Censuses, was made by Congress. At these apportionments Congress set the ratio of population for each member allowed, and also at each apportionment fixed the total number of members of the House.

The law for the taking of the Seventh Census was intended to be permanent (act of May 23, 1850, 9 Stats., 428). It presented a rule of apportionment, fixed the number of members of the House at 233, and directed the Secretary of the Interior thereafter to make the apportionment to each state.

The apportionment under the Eighth Census was made under this law, but Congress on March 4, 1862, fixed the total number of members at 241, and the Secretary of the Interior apportioned the new quotas to the states.

The ninth and tenth apportionments were made by Congress; hence it may be assumed that the power conferred on the Secretary of the Interior by the act of May 23, 1850, was repealed by implication. Heretofore all apportionments have been made at the long sessions of Congress, being the second session after each census year, but early enough for the election of representatives to the next ensuing Congress.

The apportionment under the Eleventh Census was relatively about two years earlier than any before made.

APPORTIONMENTS.

APPORTIONMENTS.

The Constitution, Article I, section 2, made the first apportionment, fixing the number of representatives to each state on the ratio of 1 representative for every 30,000 persons, in all 65 representatives.

FIRST CENSUS.

The act of April 14, 1792 (1 Stats., 253), on the ratio of 1 member for 33,000 persons, fixed the number of representatives for each state (in all 105) to take effect after March 3, 1793.

SECOND CENSUS.

The act of January 14, 1802 (2 Stats., 128), on the ratio of 1 member for 33,000 persons, fixed the number of representatives for each state (in all 141) to take effect after March 3, 1803.

THIRD CENSUS.

The act of December 21, 1811 (2 Stats., 669), on the ratio of 1 member for 35,000 persons, fixed the number of representatives for each state (181 in all) to take effect after March 3, 1813.

FOURTH CENSUS.

The act of March 7, 1822 (3 Stats., 651), on the ratio of 1 member for 40,000 persons, fixed the number of representatives for each state (in all 213) to take effect after March 3, 1823.

FIFTH CENSUS.

The act of May 22, 1832 (4 Stats., 516), on the ratio of 1 representative for 47,700 persons, fixed the number of representatives for each state (240 in all) to take effect after March 3, 1833.

SIXTH CENSUS.

The act of June 25, 1842 (5 Stats., 491), on the ratio of 1 representative for 70,680 persons, fixed the number of representatives for each state (223 in all) to take effect after March 3, 1843, and the act allowed an additional representative to each such state as had a population of a fraction greater than a moiety of said ratio. This act also required that the representatives be elected in districts composed of contiguous territory.

SEVENTH CENSUS.

The Secretary of the Interior, under the provisions of the act of May 23, 1850, made the apportionment of representatives for each state, the act having limited the number of representatives to 233 after March 3, 1850, the date said apportionment took effect. That act, sections 25 and 26, prescribed the mode of ascertaining the ratio of population.

EIGHTH CENSUS.

Under the provisions of the act of May 23, 1850, the Secretary of the Interior made the apportionment. The act of March 4, 1862 (12 Stats., 353), fixed the number of representatives at 241 after March 3, 1863, the date said apportionment took effect.

NINTH CENSUS.

The act of February 2, 1872 (17 Stats., 28), fixed the membership of the House after March 3, 1873, at 28 members, and apportioned them among the states.

TENTH CENSUS.

The act of February 25, 1882 (22 Stats., 5), fixed the membership of the House after March 3, 1883, at 32 members, and apportioned them among the states. This act provided for members from new states, and elections at large for states cut down in number of representatives, or at large for members a state may have gained by the apportionment.

ELEVENTH CENSUS.

The act of February 7, 1891, fixed the apportionment upon a basis of 356 members, who were apportioned to Congress.

The following tables bring together the facts regarding all the apportionments in a very complete and concise form:
